George Grosz, too, continued to find pleasure in drawing during the morass of the postwar years, noting and exposing events with a sensibility sharp as a knife's edge. This metamorphic act has taken us to the very brink of the world of phenomena which, if Tristan is to have his way, must be thrown over for that of noumena. They are based on our present-day mood, our nostalgia for a time that managed to gather the strength for revolutions, fully convinced that it could thus stamp the future.
