Afterwards put it into some Runlets, and cover the bung with a piece of Lead: have a care to fill it up always with the same boiled Liquor for three or four months and during the time of working. After about half an hours boiling, let the water run through a strainer to sever the herbs from it into Wooden or earthen vessels, and let it cool and settle.

Remember the last water you boil it in to this proportion of herbs, must be twelve gallons of water, and when it hath stood a day and a night, with these herbs in it, after the last boiling, then strain the Liquor from the herbs, and put as much of the finest and best honey into the Liquor, as will make it bear an Egg. Barrel it when cold, without yest. Then take it off, and set it a working at such heat as you set Beer, with good yest.
